FOOTSTEPS

You listen to the footsteps' noisy clatter
Mingled with the sounds of campus chatter.
You hear the heavy tread of young men's shoes,
The click of pointed pumps the ladies choose;
The squeak of rubber soles on tennis court,
The spring of running feet in outdoor sport.
You hear the hurrying footsteps in the halls
As shadows lengthen on the high brick walls
And students homeward wend their weary way
And footsteps fade away with the dying day.

You watch the moving feet as they hurry by
And ask yourself where the footsteps go, and why.
You walk through halls and stand in waiting lines;
You start with Time and follow the school year signs.
The footsteps lead to parties gay with laughter;
To skating, Saturday nites and the programs after --
To quiet rooms where you start the waiting day
With God alone as you kneel by your bed and pray;
To study halls where your books become close friends --
To bed at night where the long day finally ends.

You follow the trail wherever the footsteps go --
Through a warm spring rain or a heavy winter snow.
The steps may lead where there's good hard work to do,
To the farm, or bindery, or maybe the janitor crew.
The prints of your feet may be left in the muddy sod
Or beneath the trees where you spend some time with God;
But wherever the footprints lead in your busy day,
You're thankful your footsteps led you to S. L. A.
And as you make new steps in the sands of time
May others be proud to follow them, friend o' mine.

PRINCIPAL

Week by week requests come to my desk for recommendations for past students who are seeking entrance into industry or school. It has become quite evident that employers or admissions committees are concerned about two major standings. One is the character of the individual, which for all time past has been imperative for recommendations. The other is not necessarily new, but more detail is sought. Not only is a general statement requested concerning scholarship, but also class rank or grade-point average is requested. It seems that industry and education has found a definite correlation between success in scholarship and success in an occupation or advanced education. Statistics could be cited to support this fact.

South Lancaster Academy has pledged itself to aid each student attain the maximum in scholarship. It is recognized that scholarship is only one asset of a Christian education. Thus, included in our pledge is the assistance given -- spiritual, scholastical, and social -- to develop a well-rounded individual.

Lloyd S. Davis, Principal

DEDICATION

It is with true love and affection that we dedicate this book to you, Elder Madison. Those who have been privileged to sit in your classes have been inspired by your devotion to the principles you have sought to instill in us. Our love for our Redeemer and responsibility to the gospel we carry to all the world has grown deeper under your influence.

As we go forth from this institution and play a part in the world's activities, your influence through us, will be felt by those with whom we come in contact.

May the years you render to Christian education be many, and may your efforts be rewarded, not only in this life but in the life to come.

And so, Elder Madison, the students at South Lancaster Academy wish to honor you in this, the fourth volume of FOOTSTEPS for the year 1963.

Dear Betty!

The production of a yearbook creates many problems: that terrible feeling of panic as deadlines stare you in the face, the difficulties involved in inspiring others to work with you, the many phone calls and appointments, and the feeling of frustration when material is late. Then there were the staff meetings when lesson assignments or the latest bit of news fought for first place in our conversation. These are a part of the foundation upon which this Yearbook is built.

Your Yearbook staff has tried to highlight this year at S.L.A. by making the familiar highway signs our theme. As with all state roads, life at S.L.A. has its laws, boundaries and occasional jolts. The historic portrayal of this one section of the highway is the sum total of this Yearbook.

While we have had many discussions and division of opinions, we have all worked with the same goal in mind—to create a Yearbook that will truly represent our school and what it stands for.

We trust this Yearbook will, in the years to come, relive this little bit of history for you. Forgetting our many problems we rejoice that we can, with reasonable pride, present to you the FOOTSTEPS of 1963.

Some people have the misconception that all an editor does is assign articles, collect them, put the paper together, and then sit back and take all the credit for a good issue. During the week and a half it takes to get an issue out, an editor does very little studying, eating, or sleeping. He types when there isn't time to give a late article to the regular typist and still get it to the press on time. He is a circulation manager, finding out why "my grandmother isn't getting the paper." He has to be a photographer's assistant, telling the photographer what pictures he wants, where and how he'd like them taken. He must be a reporter, writing articles someone else has forgotten. And he must do his own job of editing: eliminating parts of an article that is too long, adding to one that is too short. He has to ask, beg, plead, and scheme to get information, and then go through the same process all over again getting someone to write about it.

But he is lucky, because he has a most kind and understanding sponsor, able assistants, and a helpful staff. With all the words he sees and uses during the school year, he still has a hard time finding the right words to properly thank them all.

S. L. A. SKETCHES

Fellow student, as the school year '62-'63 draws to a close and passes into history, take a moment and review the many scenes and sketches which you enjoyed being a part of this year.

Recall the weeks of prayer and the quiet Friday vesper services.

Do not forget the times when you surprised yourself by finding out that school work wasn't always drudgery but even sometimes interesting.

Remember the satisfaction of doing your work well and pleasing your employer.

Recall the programs seen, the parties gone to, the skating and tobogganing, and all the other good times one has with friends.

Now take your sketches, these and all the others; bind and seal them, and keep them as a reminder of the privilege that was your's in attending South Lancaster Academy this year.
